“ John was a very good man. He married my mother who had five children, three who were still teenagers living at home. He was a fair, supportive and patient stepfather, and he made my mother happy. Their marriage was cut short when after nine years she passed away from cancer. When he remarried within a year, it was said that it meant that he was happy in his first marriage, and wanted to have that again in his life. I will miss our occasional phone conversations, which we had until an unfortunate disconnect a few years ago. I met his sister Jane back during his marriage with my mom, and used to hear updates about her through John. My condolences to her with the loss of her older brother.
